ESF takes its place in The Family Business Top 100 list

ESF CEO Alan Lowry has been recognised as an 'exceptional individual' within the family business sector after being announced in the inaugural Family Business Top 100.

The list, created by Family Business United, the global voice of the family business community, which showcased some of the best family business individuals across the UK, recognising their efforts and demonstrating their collective importance to the national economy.

Nominations were sought from all corners of the UK and all sectors of the economy. Entrants must have been working in a senior position within the business for at least five years.

This campaign and the creation of the inaugural report into the Family Business Top 100 is the perfect way to showcase these individuals, recognising their efforts and demonstrating their collective importance to our national economy. We wanted to do something special to celebrate ten years of Family Business United and what better way than to celebrate the individuals managing the businesses that are at the very heart of what we do – championing family firms across the whole of the UK. The last year in particular has not been easy and we are excited about pulling together the 'best of the best' in terms of family business and showcasing what the sector is all about too.
