Success at Fläkt Woods' second Energy Efficiency Symposium

Fläkt Woods' second Energy Efficiency Symposium was a resounding success, with over 50 guests attending the event at the Building Centre in London.

On Thursday June 18, guests were invited to join the Fläkt Woods team and guest speaker Professor Tim Dwyer to learn more about the critical issue of indoor air quality (IAQ) and good ventilation in schools and education facilities.

Yan Evans at Fläkt Woods comments: "It was great to have esteemed CIBSE technical editor, Professor Tim Dwyer, deliver the CPD presentation at the symposium. Attendees were given the opportunity to gain CPD credits, whilst learning more about the importance of IAQ in the education sector.

"Following the CPD presentation, guests were also invited to participate in a Q&A session with our in-house experts and discuss energy efficient solutions, such as our new eCO PREMIUM energy recovery unit."

The free symposium followed this year's launch of Fläkt Woods' innovative, and class leading, eCO PREMIUM energy recovery unit, which is a key solution for schools in particular, where the pressure on ensuring the wellbeing of children and teaching staff has heightened.

eCO PREMIUM has been specifically developed to assist schools in meeting increasingly stringent government guidelines, whilst cutting operating costs too. The unit is capable of recovering 85 per cent of the thermal energy, making it a highly efficient low carbon solution.

Yan concludes: "We've had some great feedback, and we will certainly be looking at holding further symposiums later this year around other key issues in the ventilation arena."
